POLICING THE HOUSELESS 2.0

Arrests by the LAPD (2012-2017)

A MILLION DOLLAR HOODS REPORT

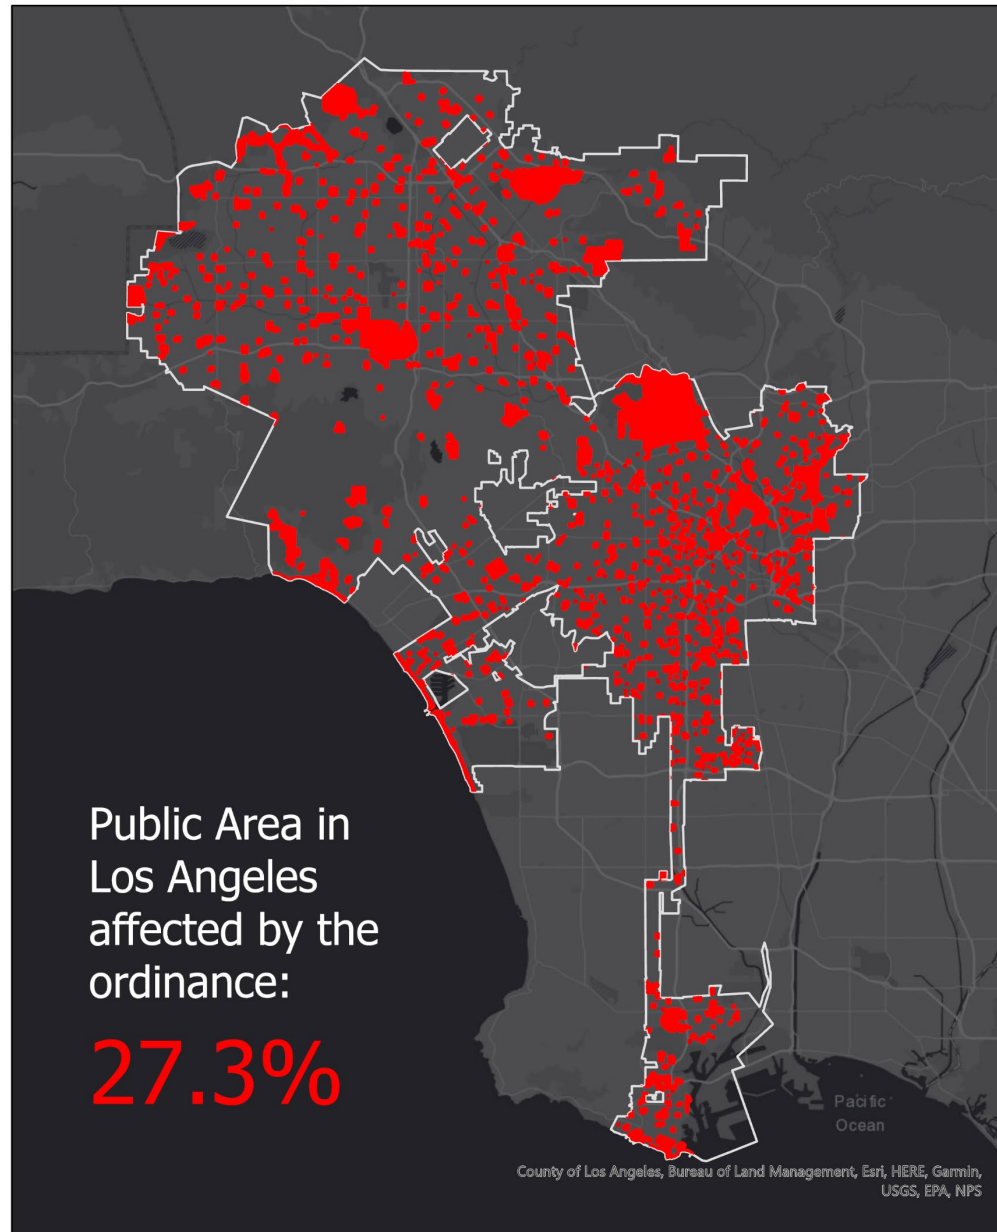

Danielle Dupuy MPH, Terry Allen MA, and Kelly Lytle Hernández PhD
Consultation provided by Pete White, Los Angeles Community Action Network

On October 10, 2017, the Million Dollar Hoods research team released, "Policing the Houseless," which documented the trends and disparities in LAPD arrests of houseless persons between 2011 and 2016.¹ After its release, we received several requests for additional analyses of LAPD data. In particular, community members wanted to know the 2017 arrest trends and the types of charges leading LAPD arrests of houseless persons.² Using LAPD arrest data for January 1, 2012 to June 30, 2017, this report documents that LAPD arrests of houseless persons continued to climb during the first six months of 2017 and that just five charge categories accounted for the majority of houseless arrests.

Group Projects

Final Group Project Reminder:

Relies on community-based and/or crowd-sourced data

Only uses government or private data sources

Designed for a social good and/or political campaign

Designed for-profit or for self-profit

Realigns power back to communities being harmed

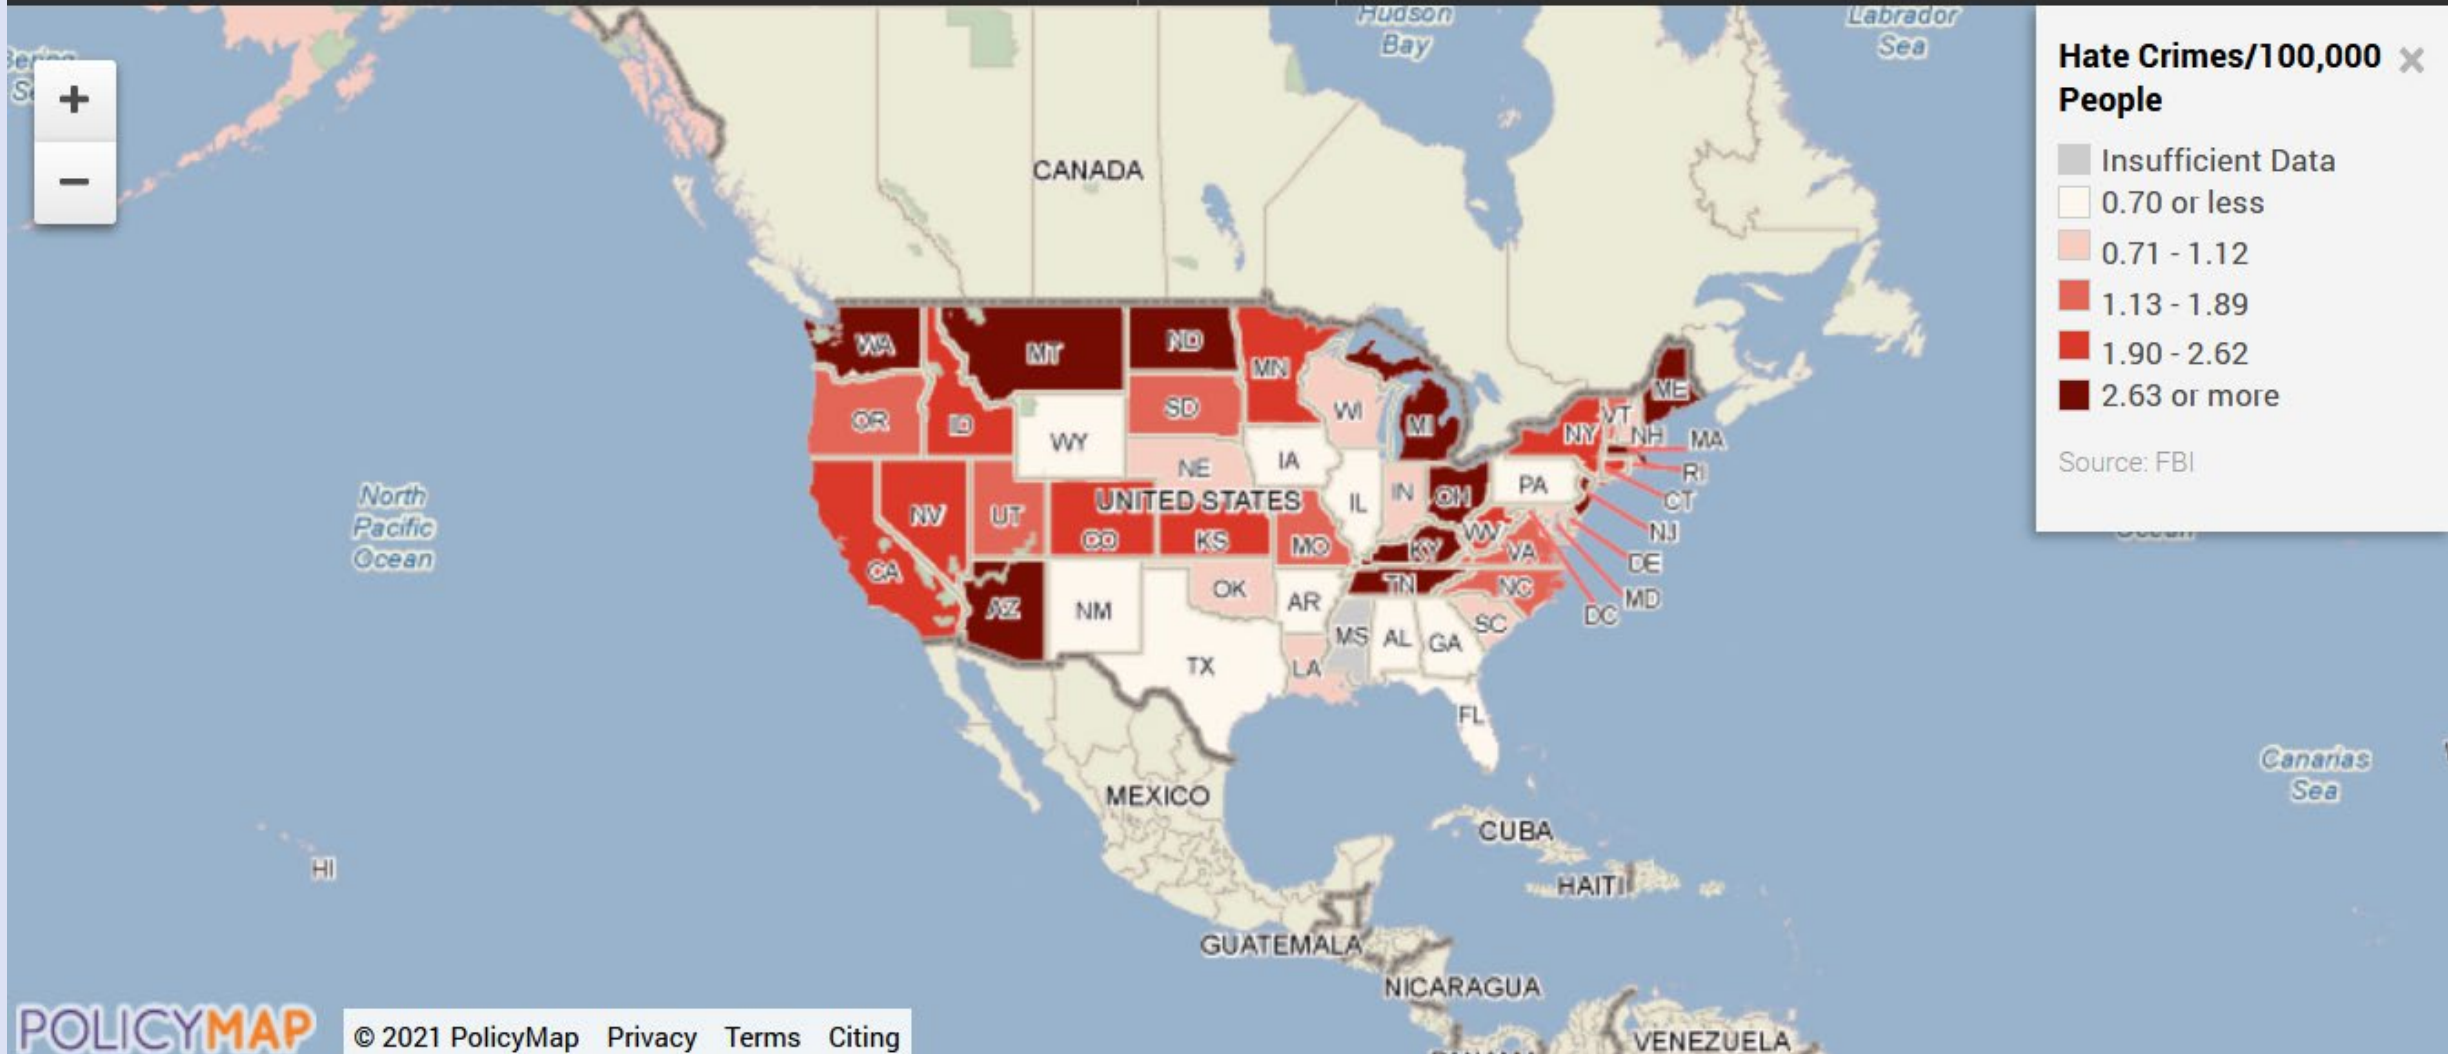

Reinforces corporate, academic, or governmental institutions

Focus on the people, not the data

Example: a tale of two hate crime maps

Rate of hate crimes reported per 100,000 people in 2015.

persona + need + purpose

As an elderly Asian living in San Francisco, I want to see where I can get escorted when I walk home from grocery shopping, so I feel safe.

As a houseless person in Los Angeles, I want to share my stories about how destructive sidewalk sweeps have been for me, so LAPD can stop.

Main take-away:

Since coding is a set of instructions, if you forget where you are going, try remembering your ultimate goals are.

Group Assignment #2

Reimagining 6th

Background

Koreatown is the most park-poor neighborhood in Los Angeles. In addition to this glaring issue, most of Koreatown's streets are on the high injury network due to uncontrollable traffic violence.¹ Small businesses in these high traffic areas struggle to stay afloat, and park space is inequitably allocated to Koreatown in comparison to broader Los Angeles. Specifically, Koreatown only has 0.5 acres of park space per 1,000 people, in comparison to 9.2 acres of park space for every 1,000 people across the city of L.A.

Objectives

We hope to assist Adriane Hoff in reclaiming public space in Koreatown by adding community amenities to a closed down 6th street from Normandie to Vermont. We aim to achieve this goal by:

- Redesigning Adriane's previous survey to outreach to Koreatown residents and collect their narratives regarding the construction of the project.
